

Reflection 3

As the end of the semester is wrapping up I have now completed my rough draft. Although I thought it was good I was in denial of my writing abilities and realized I needed to spend much more time with my paper and give all the effort I have to make it presentable. Together I ended up having forty-six corrections to make that my teacher sent to me. I used first person when I wasn't supposed to and had many grammar mistakes to correct. This junior paper has taken one hundred and ten percent more effort than I would have ever thought in my life. I learned not to procrastinate as much and to just get it done when it's assigned. I have learned how to do source cards along with note cards, and most importantly to prevent any legal issues in my future I have learned how to do a work cited page to give credit to the authors or any professionals who have provided me with the information I have used in my research paper. I believe this paper will give me a solid background and foundation for next year's senior project which I hope to make an A on.
